"I have frequented theaters in almost every large city on this continent and in Europe," declared a woman of social importance last Tuesday morning at the Morning Choral rehearsal, "but it remains for St. Louis to develop some of the worst-mannered and the most inconsiderate audiences

I have ever beheld. "Were you at the Olympic last night to see the first appearance of John Drew and his company? The play began prompt on time-8:15-not a moment sooner. There were just sixty persons in the lower house and they were so scattered as to indicate that the entire floor was sold. From the time the curtain rose until ten minutes to nine-in other words, during the whole of the first act-people came in and took their seats. And such noise, laughing chat-ting and rustling of silken skirts as there was in the foyer! Needless to say that the act was ruined so far as both performers and the early comers were concerned. But that wasn't all.

"In the middle of the fourth act, there came one of those quick, short stops, when the unthinking may possibly imagine that the curtain is shortly to descend. These same 'unthinking' numbered about eight, men and women, and they sat down either in the very front row or near it. Do you know they actually rose and streamed up the aisles, distracting everybody round them, giving a signal to others in the rear of the house who began to hunt for hats under seats, and to pin on plumes and things; and for about three minutes the hubbub was sufficient to stop the play. ubbub was sufficient to stop the play.
"Mr. Drew would have been perfectly justified in coming to the footlights and de livering a stinging rebuke. If Richard Mansfield had been the actor, I verily believe that he would have done so, for Mans old, as everybody knows, never hesitates to speak his mind.

"When the sufferers—and they numbered hundreds the other night—make up their minds to send out a few good strong hisses, as they do in the Germania Theater when people talk or get noisy, then, perhaps, the rude ones will take the hint. And as for the late comers, why don't the theaters adopt Odeon principles and make these wait in the foyer until there is a convenient pause? A few wait for twenty minutes o ess for a few first nights would soon teach a lesson that these inconsiderate person

The Randolph Hutchinsons and several other families in the old and eminently aristocratic Southern set received cards last week announcing the marriage of Miss Lily Coles to George Catlett Marshall, Lieu-tenant in the United States Army, at Lexington, Va., where the Coles family has lived since removing from St. Louis. "I believe that it is Mrs. Ludium's intention to read without the music accompaniment, which Bispham made so much of, and which, to tell the truth, while it added the charm of noveity, detracted in no small degree from the real music effect of the poem itself. As Mrs. Ludium has not been heard in her own city for two years, owing to continued ilinesses, her friends are anticipating the evening with pleasure. It is an invitation affair, about 500 cards having been sent out.

Fouring tea in late afternoon hours has a revival this Lent. Of course I mean informally—just a drop for your dearest and best, when they run in on the way home from a French lesson or the modiste's or an appointment with the riding master. an appointment with the riding master.

There are still a great many women who prefer the taste of tea to that of any other afternoon beverage, and these are the ones on beverage, and these are the ones whose 5 o'clock table is still in evidence. Value by Cook table is still in convenient places—those easily reached as one crosses the boulevards and in the vicinity of Grand avenue—are the most popular stesses in this pleasant Lenten tea-party that there is a fragrant aroma of orange and they take advantage of the fact. An they are not merely feminine friends, either. You'd be surprised to know how men really like a well-made cup of

By the by, you ladies who pour for your friends these days, let me suggest "Scotch short-bread" as a dainty for the table. You can get it from one caterer in town, I think, who makes it for special orders; but think who makes it for special orders, but it is no trouble at all to manage yourself. Take equal weights of sugar, flour and butter, mix thoroughly, press in a flat cake, about one inch thick; strew the top with caraway seeds, putting a few inside, if you like lots of caraway, and then bake in a new control of the caraway and the bake in a new caraway. very slow oven until the cake is a pale brown. It should be rich and crumbly in its texture, when allowed to cool. Mark off two-inch squares when you put it in the oven, and then break off the pieces and serve with tes.

There is a wonderfully smart spring stock just out. I saw Mary Kennard wearing it swathed round her slender throat a few days ago, and I surmised that she had brought it home from Bastern sheps. Black taffeta forms the stock part, made in double fashion, with two side pieces that come within an inch or so of meeting under the chin. A long button-hole is worked in the end of each of these, straight up and down, you know, and through these two buttonoles is run a short four-in-hand tie of silks is most attractive, and the shape of the whole becoming and graceful.

Another tie which I haven't seen at all in St. Louis as yet is dubbed the "corona-tion." This is black satin, and has length for its chief characteristic. It will look well on siender girls, who rejoice in a long, low dip to their shirt walsts. It is worn with a high turnover collur-one of those dainty lace and embroidery affairs that do not quite meet in front. The satin, about nch and a half wide, ties twice round the neck, and then in a small bow-kno directly in the middle, and where the collar parts. The ends, which are sharply pointed, fall straight to the waist line. SERENA LAMB.
